Owning a Dallas$

I told Casey I quit my job today. I know how that impresses people. I'm sure Casey was saying "He quit his job, now there's a guy who's going places." I decided I was going to live off of my writing. So basically I'm going to starve and be homeless. That sounds nice.

Or maybe I'm crazy enough, just crazy enough to pull it off, and become the next best thing since Calvin and Hobbes. "To all of you out there, I'm selling poems, selling beautiful, wonderful works of art called poems. Only 20 dollars a poem. Now you can impress all of your friends by owning an original Dallas. You've always wanted a dog to take care of, well why not take care of an original Dallas poem, nurture it, breast feed it and sing it to bed. Frame it and put it on your wall and when you're ready to sell your house the appraisal value has now gone up 20,000 dollars more. Also, you'll become the most popular kid in school once they find out you read poetry. Jenny in Biology will say, 'I was going to date Brock because he's the quarterback of the football team, but that was until I met Timmy. He reads poems. He's sensitive'."

It might work, it just might fucking work. I don't even know what might work because I don't know what I'm talking about, but it sounds good. I'm just upset the Phoenix Suns can't win.

Dallas$ Roberts$

Dallas Roberts is 29 years old and he recently moved to Glendale from Arizona to pursue acting and writing. He graduated from Arizona State University in 2001 in Theater Arts. His first job out of College was a welding job. So the degree came in handy. He has been to the beach many times since he's moved here, as the closest thing to the beach in Arizona is a little puddle of water next to the cacti. He's met many interesting people out here so far, and looks forward to meeting many more. He wants to thank Rick for this opportunity, and he wants you always to remember, "Greed is good."
