The brazen beheld the backwoods tough a million miles from home, mocked him with pinned eyes, silent smirks. The tough beheld the horizon, became tender-hearted, sunset bathed a baby swan in a lump sum of gold, praising it for his appraisal, a vision even he w/ ambidextrous sleight of hand couldn't pilfer for his legacy of envision this and marvel much Danger on the outskirts, the edge a razor cold begging for warmth from blood's augury foretold like sunrise cracking the ice of a lake, fish heaven.

From a field of tall grass blonde as his beloved,

I stole a glance of dove's wings turning to diamond rippled flaws bleeding emerald pond to the beating of the beams of dawn before the field was full of fog, breathing for once and at last, the true breath of flight.
